

52 Places, Virtually

While you're stuck at home waiting for travel restrictions to be lifted, we invite you on a virtual visit to each and every one of our Places to Go in 2020.

By Paige McClanahan and Debra Kamin

April 14, 2020 Updated 8:58 a.m. ET

Travel and travel planning are being disrupted by the worldwide spread of the coronavirus. For the latest updates, read The New York Times's Covid-19 coverage here.

When we published our list of 52 places to visit in 2020 three months ago, no one could have guessed how much our world would change. And now, given our stay-at-home circumstances, we'd like to invite you on a series of virtual journeys: You can wander into the belly of an Egyptian pyramid, explore the house where Mozart was born, or fly over the rocky peaks of Glacier National Park. Sure, you'll be looking at a screen, but you'll see new places, hear new languages and pick up some interesting tidbits about other cultures. Call it a warm-up for that moment when you'll actually be packing your bags and heading out for your next adventure.

Sebastian Modak, the 2019 52 Places Traveler contacted friends he met on his journey around the world to [see how they were doing during the pandemic.]

Marcus Westberg

30) Uganda

There is perhaps no better spot on earth to see gorillas than Uganda, home to the Bwindi Impenetrable Forest Park, a habitat for half of the world's endangered mountain gorillas. And the virtual reality house VR Gorilla will take you right into the dense forest to meet them up close.